

TEENAGE EXILES

Director(s): Antoine DUBOS

Writer(s): Antoine DUBOS

After a long journey from Guinea to France, Yakouba arrived in Lyon, all on his own, when he was 16. He joined a group of fellow minors from abroad who were fighting for their rights and he became their spokesman. That's where he met Banthieni, from Mali, and Fanny, a young girl from Cameroon who was about to become a mother.

As they had all been under age and on their own when they arrived, they had initially been supported by child protection services. But they will soon turn 18 and will become undocumented immigrants in the eyes of the law and thus would be asked to leave the territory.

In his role of 'big brother', Yakouba tells of their daily struggle to carve out an existence... Although they badly miss their families back in their own country, they want to build a future in France and try to move forward. They collect snapshots of their lives here on their mobile phones as if it would tie them to France...

Together, these young people not only face the difficult passage to adulthood, but also the fact of becoming "outlaws".
