What remains of a life of struggles?

As the disappearance of their small religious community looms, the Helper Nuns of Quebec are preparing to bequeath what's most precious to them: years of campaigning for women's rights, social justice and international solidarity.

Between apprehension about death, outbursts of laughter and meals washed down with wine, these dignified free-spirited women live the meaning of sisterhood to the full. Until the very end.

THE PRESS:

"In a once omnipotent Quebecois church, they seem to embody an alternative to the type of clericalism scorned by Pope Francis: a documentary with no priest, no bishop, simply nuns in pants and blouses, whom we follow from the National Assembly where one of them is given a medal to the seniors' rooms, which a younger sister visits daily for treatment..."
